LAUNCHBOARD ATOMIC DESIGN SYSTEM

WHAT IS ATOMIC DESIGN

Atomic design is a methodology founded by Brad Frost as a science-related approach for creating design systems. It is comprised of the following five distinct levels:

Pg. 01	Atoms
Pg. 06	Molecules
Pg. 10	Organisms
Pg. 15	Templates
N/A	Pages

This guide breaks down Launchboard's first four levels. The fifth level, Pages, is left out due to sensitive information. Access to the application or design files is behind secured authorization.

“In searching for inspiration and parallels, I kept coming back to chemistry. The thought is that all matter (whether solid, liquid, gas, simple, complex, etc) is comprised of atoms. Those atomic units bond together to form molecules, which in turn combine into more complex organisms to ultimately create all matter in our universe.

Similarly, interfaces are made up of smaller components. This means we can break entire interfaces down into fundamental building blocks and work up from there. That's the basic gist of atomic design.”

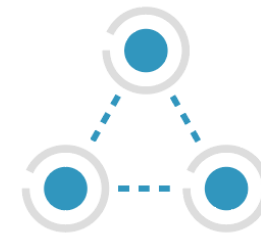

ATOMS

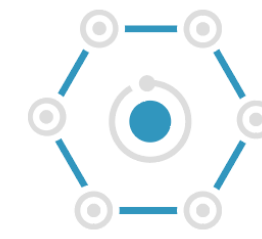

If atoms are the basic building blocks of matter, then the atoms of our interfaces serve as the foundational building blocks that comprise all our user interfaces.

MOLECULES

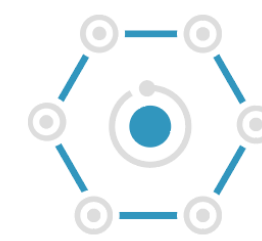

In interfaces, molecules are relatively simple groups of UI elements functioning together as a unit. For example, a form label, search input, and button can join together to create a search form molecule.

TEMPLATES

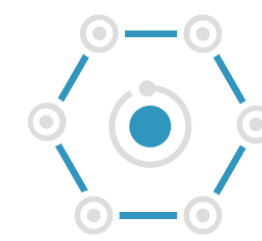

Templates are page-level objects that place components into a layout and articulate the design's underlying content structure. To build on our previous example, we can take the header organism and apply it to a homepage template.
